“Disparities and conflicts around us seem to be growing even as we see economic growth. Bridging the urban-rural divide and other disparities by leveraging the opportunities of the knowledge era and the eternal Gandhian values can minimise them. They would also lead to a more sustainable and conflict free world.”

The one year post graduate diploma course in ‘Sustainable Rural Reconstruction: Gandhian perspective’ at Gandhi Research Foundation aims to nurture youth to engage themselves into this noble task.

Students' speak

“This course gave me a comprehensive understanding of rural development and sustainable growth. The course focussed on hands-on training, allowing me to participate in real-time field projects where I could apply the knowledge I gained in practical settings.”

– Vaibhav Jadhav

“I gained diverse experiences that shaped my understanding of rural development and sustainability. The role-playing in the NGL Camp enhanced my leadership skills. Through the Gram Samwad Cycle Yatra, I connected with village communities and understood their challenges.”

– Shalini Banik

“This course is an attempt to understand societal problems and find solutions. I understood Gandhi's life and his work and gained insight into what it means to be a Gandhian leader. We connected with young representatives from different states and learned about the lives and struggles of tribal communities. The foundation of Gram Swaraj begins in the village, and I had the opportunity to work with people in the village to gain a deeper understanding.”

– Puja Uikey
